His hour had come. No other hypothesis was satisfactory to explain his arrest, his chains and his cross. Just as he used his inherent strength, the result would have been radically different. Once he had been freed, he would have been tried to seize him, he would have been tried to seize him, he would have been tried to seize him.

No other accused party ever fixed the date and time for his execution. He proved himself greater than judge, jury and law that condemned him. Had it been the will of his Father, he could easily have avoided the cruel blow of his arrest and execution. One word of protest from him and the untried man against him would have been null and void.

FAST DAY COLLECTION HELPS NEAR EAST

A congregation of good proportions attended a Fast Day service on Friday evening at 7.30 in the United Congregational church in which that church, Trinity Methodist, First Baptist, Greenville Congregational, and the Church of the Good Shepherd (Universalist) joined, the different pastors participating in the order of the service. A collection that was taken amounted to $43.07 and was for the Near East Aid fund.

The service was conducted by Rev. C. H. Ricketts of the Greenville Congregational church, who spoke upon "The Fettered Christ Victorious." The text in Matthew 23:39, "When they shall see thee, they shall say, Blessed be thou, O Christ, who hast led us out of bondage."

The order of the service was as follows: Organ Prelude, Frederick W. Lester, organist; minister and choir; prayer, Rev. J. P. Cobb; anthem, by choir; responsive reading, led by Rev. E. A. Legg; sacred lesson by Rev. H. H. Strouse; hymn, prayer and benediction, Rev. E. A. Legg.

In part Rev. Mr. Ricketts spoke as follows: "Let us consider in what the binding of Jesus consisted. He was 'led away,' not carried or dragged, hence he was voluntarily bound. But why should hands have been fettered? No hands merited perfect freedom more than his. He had been free from birth, honest, true, never retailed, that he devoted to charity and mercy, that he stopped the funeral procession and made it give thanks. What he touched blind eyes, deaf ears, and silent tongues and they became instinct with life again. These were the hands that had been bound and nailed to the cross."

In what sense then was this fettering a triumph for Christ? There was the voluntary repression of conscious power. His hour had come. No other hypothesis was satisfactory to explain his arrest, his chains and his cross. Just as he used his inherent strength, the result would have been radically different. Once he had been freed, he would have been tried to seize him, he would have been tried to seize him, he would have been tried to seize him.

tion proclamation and again the fettered Christ was victorious. Although the cowardly bullet struck him low, slavery was abolished forever from our soil.

In our day the cause of temperance has met with a like vindication. Its history has been a strange repetition of the ups and downs of the slavery question. But at last freedom has dawned and the finger of God has been pointed against the slave.

The constitution of the United States, that amendment with the Declaration of Independence and the emancipation proclamation form the triumvirate of our liberties. It marks another victory for the once fettered Christ.

We need never to be ashamed to be in the minority, for which Jesus was bound and for which he died. Evil that is arrayed against the Lord and his anointed may bind our hands, but that very evil will be the unbinding of our life and light.

At Park Church.
At Park Congregational church at 11 o'clock on Friday morning a special service was held with music and singing appropriate to the solemn day of Crucifixion. The Processional to Calvary (Stainer) was played by Miss Annie L. Taft, organist.

The regular choir, assisted by the clear, sweet voice of Mrs. James A. Bell, sang for the anthem, "O Saviour, who hast led us out of bondage."

The work of which Mrs. Arthur E. Story's charming soprano was heard to fine advantage.

Rev. Mr.
